

HERALD GIVES NEWS TO THROGS

Thousands Eagerly Watch Bulletins of the Election.

PACK STREET ENTIRE WIDTH

CROWD IS GOOD-NATURED, THOUGH HARD TO HANDLE.

In one great, howling mass, or rather in several great, howling masses, that stretched across Main street from window to window, between First and Second South, Salt Lake turned out last night to watch the progress of the critical fight at home and through the nation as flashed out by The Herald's stereopticon.

The 6,000 or more persons who gathered in front of this office to get the best news service on the struggle were not confined to any one party. Democrat and Republican jostled with American and Socialist for a foot-hold. Enthusiasm was rampant, and soreness seemed to be none. When the tide favored the party at present in power, those of different beliefs respectfully deferred and let them yell themselves hoarse. And when the other side had its lining, it was given an opportunity to repeat the performance.

As usual, if size of crowd is to be taken as a guide, The Herald had a larger crowd of the more prominent clubs about the city, a number of the saloons reported the results from the different states. The Herald's audience was many times as large as all others combined. A special Associated Press wire in the office, bulletins were flashed to the throngs out of the building within a few seconds of their receipt by the operator.

That the crowd was the largest that ever gathered to watch political returns in this city, was a common observation. It required every policeman on the police force to handle it. Looking westward from First South street, those in front of The Herald office stood out in relief like an immense black wall against the glare of the bonfire farther up toward First South.

Crowd Packed in Tight.

And in many respects the crowd was a wall. It formed an effective barrier to street car, vehicle and pedestrian alike. A hundred feet long, as much again wide, and six feet deep, it presented a barrier to progress through the block that required indeed a courageous heart to attempt. Big and little folks of both sexes crowded a little too close together, and from dark until after midnight the crowd was packed so tight that it was almost impossible to get away from the facts on the stereopticon that at least five fellow-men in misery.

It was the occasion premier for the noise-maker, and from dark until after midnight the crowd was packed so tight that it was almost impossible to get away from the facts on the stereopticon that at least five fellow-men in misery.

Shortly after 7 o'clock The Herald displayed the first bulletins which gave definite assurance that the day was won. But the waiting thousands continued to wait in order to see how the thing happened. At midnight hundreds still were gathered on Main street following up the late returns.

Photograph Out of Question.

It is hard to realize just how large last night's crowd was. A conservative estimate placed the number of persons who were watching The Herald's bulletins at 6,000. At that time it was proposed to take a flash photograph of the throng in front of the Progress building, but this idea was given up. In the words of The Herald photographer, "there was not enough people in Salt Lake to take a picture of the crowd."

Everyone who has witnessed "death walks" at former elections declare that the crowds were not so large. In fact, instances of rowdiness were few, in only a few cases the intervention of officers being required. About seven youths were arrested in discharging blank cartridges to the danger of their own vicinity, but none of the offenders was apprehended.

Returns were received at the Alta, Commercial and University clubs. All streets, however, excepting Main and Second South, were practically deserted.
